

Eminent Critics of the White Paper

Ross Guest, a Professor of Economics at Griffith Business School, has reminded us that Australia accounts for about 1% on the new carbon dioxide emissions per annum.

And PM Rudd's new white paper has recommended we cut at 5%, this means that our contribution will be 5% of 1% which, for all practical purposes, is really zero.

And financial writer Terry McCrann pointed out on Monday that if the total CO2 additions of the so called developed world were committed to 100% reduction, it would be swamped by emissions from China – and this is not to mention India, Russia and Brazil.

But hysterical dark green Leader Bob Brown wants Australia to commit 100% and Rudd appealed to the population to “save” the Barrier Reef, Kakadu National Park, The Murray Darling river system and to stop farms becoming dust bowls.

All of this is emotive nonsense, but for what?

To generate a huge bureaucracy which will decimate Australia's remaining industry and, in the long term turn Australia into the most underdeveloped sovietized nation on earth. And with a huge inflation rate!

Zimbabwe is a great example and fitting model. As McCrann stated, “Australia and Australians will be poorer, permanently.”

Ronald Kitching

P.O. Box 9809

Frenchville QLD 4701.

Australia.

17 December 2008