A new Ford motor plant has been built in Camacari near Salvador in Brazil. It is one of the most modern and most productive motor plants in the world.

Ford have even built their own port nearby from which are exported five different models of vehicles.

Ford would love to build such a plant in the U. S. A., however, the Union of Automobile Workers (UAW), will not permit it to do so.

Here in Australia, the ideologies of rabid protectionist unionism, plus the destructive socialist policies which threaten secure private property rights, rule of law, low taxation, free markets and indulgence in dishonest money, guarantee no such plant will ever be built in Australia either.

Furthermore, the now popular but socially destructive policies of the dark greens deny producers the freedom to indulge in sensible agricultural, exploration and mining and associated capital goods such as new rail lines, new ports and forbids the clearing of land for new agricultural pursuits. The very idea of a proposal for a new dams is regarded as sacrilege.

This is a nation where four fifths of the rain water that falls annually, flows into the sea, and great areas of arable land lie idle. All of this while the political leaders propose that the population drink their own sewerage.

Nature abhors a vacuum and if the present Australian population does not act soon, there are literally billions of people to the north of us in India, Indonesia and China who will.
